

“Living as passionate followers of Jesus to change the world.”

Dear Trinity,

Dave Williams, our Servant Council Chair, and I like share our faith journey when we meet to discuss church business. Sometimes that leads to philosophical tangents. When we met last week this quote by Socrates came to us:

“The unexamined life is not worth living.”

The original language conveys the idea that if a person doesn't take an account of their life, its worth, and what they do with it, she or he will not live a life that is full of value.

This last Sunday we considered time from a Biblical perspective. The most important point was that the time we have is a gift from God. Those who are grateful for the gift tend to live fuller lives. The second point was that we are accountable for our use of the gifts God gives us, including our time. Stephen R. Covey said, “The key is in not spending time, but in investing it.” For Christians, the most important investment is in God's Kingdom.

How do we know how to invest our time? In many ways our conscience can help guide us if we take time to give time to God in prayer and studying His Word. This week I encourage you to take a moment at the end of each day examining how you spent your time. In what ways did you invest time wisely? Are there ways the next day you might do better? Then before sleep thank God for the day and ask for help to make the next day the best it can be.

This Sunday we are going to celebrate the best Source of help we can ever have in living our lives to their fullest. Wear red if you can!

Hope you can be there!

Pastor Jeff
